These essential pain-relieving medications must be carefully managed to prevent serious side effects that may include physical dependence, addiction, and even death, which has led in recent years to increased attention on the development of alternative treatments for chronic pain. Chapters are written by expert contributors from diverse backgrounds in medicine, psychiatry, pharmacy, nursing, health law, and ethics. Prescription Drug Diversion and Pain is a must-read for healthcare professionals, caregivers, policy makers, regulatory officials, law enforcement, and those in the pharmaceutical industry seeking to address the current and future opioid crisis.

This discussion begins by reviewing the problem of prescription drug abuse and diversion and examining the legal environment surrounding this issue specific to New York State. The general climate surrounding enforcement efforts is discussed with the goal of identifying the role that the individual patrol officer or investigator is currently playing in responding to this unique issue that commonly begins in the world of traditional white collar crime, descends all the way to the realm of traditional street level drug activity, and often returns to the white collar sphere. The impediments individual patrol officers face in supporting this mission such as a lack of inclusion in the limited large scale enforcement programs targeting this crime and the lack of high level proper training that would enable patrol officers to individually address such crimes that incorporate elements that are often foreign to members of law enforcement resources. The proper components of a training program that would enable an individual patrol officer to successfully investigate such a crime are identified as a targeted review of New York State Law, the proper and practical application of offenses, proper field identification of prescription controlled substances, and the proper preparation of court documents are discussed. Examples of relevant reference materials are included to aid the individual patrol officer in taking on this complex mix of white collar, organized, and traditional street level drug crime in the field by dome light.
